Andy's nomination stated:

Andy has acted as a mentor for junior staff, coaching them on coastal management and assisting those pursuing chartered status with professional bodies. He has therefore led on capacity building for the future to ensure the future of the North West coast is in safe hands.

He is the 'go to' person within the EA for any queries along the Lancashire and Cumbria coast, while also being seen nationally within the organisation and within other bodies as a key figure to help and advise others on coastal issues.

Andy's proactive attitude, legacy of delivery on the North West coast, and the esteem with which he is held by colleagues within and outside of the EA, make him truly deserving of the title of 'Coastal Champion'.

The H2H Cultural Heritage Volunteers' nomination stated:

The Cultural Heritage Volunteers have made a notable impact to numerous sites around the Morecambe Bay area. Their passion to disseminate their experiences and encourage others to get involved in protecting the unique heritage of the Bay is inspiring.

Their commitment to the cultural heritage projects is reaping substantial benefits to heritage sites as well as personal wellbeing. New friendships have formed and networks fostered.

Once trained, the volunteers use their newfound skills to help new recruits and even go out in their own time to undertake recording and research. Through their dedication the volunteers are developing their own legacies for the H2H project work, which will hopefully result in a strong, well-trained and dedicated cultural heritage network.

Coastal Best Practice: Celebrating Coastal Culture & Heritage

The Sefton Coast Landscape Partnership's 'The Flock' nomination stated:

By linking the project to World Wader Day 'The Flock' enjoyed global publicity. Social media coverage drew response from as far away as Columbia and Greenland. New Zealand conservationists now have 'The Flock New Zealand' which tours schools and communities there.

Working closely with community groups, businesses and charities showed what could be achieved through partnership working.

By allowing participants to collect and keep their individual works after it was exhibited the message of wader/coastline conservation was kept fresh amongst all involved, from school children to pensioners.

Coastal Best Practice: Education & Skills

The Natural Alternatives 'Crosby Nature Trail' nomination stated:

The boardwalk allows members of the community of all ages to easily walk around the site, observing flora and fauna as they go.

Community links were strengthened by a range of community art and the area is used for educational sessions with local schools, including Forest School sessions, and by families who sign their children up on Holiday Clubs held throughout the year.

Members of the Natural Alternatives Team hosted an official opening in the summer and continue to be involved in site management.

The project has given the Natural Alternatives team new knowledge and confidence and provided the community with a new site to enjoy and learn about the natural history of the Sefton coast.
